More Plans for the Parking Garage

Rachel Tyner
The Sandspur

On September 21, 2000, the Campus Safety administration met to discuss plans to improve the parking garage. They are slowly but surely making improvements in the garage and on campus.

The garage is not just for Rollins students; it is accessible to the customers and employees of several commercial venues. This makes it difficult to know who is using the garage. Rollins decided to have the employees of these stores put a decal on their car, similar to the ones that Rollins students have on their cars. Campus Safety is also going to increase the security in the garage. Brad McKown, the Director of Campus Safety, said he was encouraged by the amount of usage the garage is getting this year. "It means more people are parking in the garage and freeing up spaces on campus that can be used for visitors and faculty," McKown hopes that people will continue to park in the garage even after the opening of the new gym, which will have a large parking lot in front of it.

One of the drawbacks of having the garage being used so much is that there are very few spaces left for other non-students, such as the people working on the gym and other construction sites around the school. Julius Jacobs, the Operations Lieutenant for Campus Safety, said they are asking the workers to park behind Harmon and Pflug, a parking lot that is mainly used for sophomores. They hope this will free up a lot of parking spaces in the garage.

Campus Safety also devised a plan that will make crossing Fairbanks Ave. safer. A light will be put in place that will be in sync with the light at the intersection of Park Ave. and Fairbanks. It will be a regular traffic light but will stay green unless the "cross" button is pushed. The light should be in place no later than February but could be in as early as November.

"Reality"

Kyle Stedman
The Sandspur

"Man lives in the sunlit world of what he believes to be reality," says the evil, cinnamon-voiced narrator of Tales from the Dark Side.

"A-ha!" I cry. "I knew none of this was real!" After all, I've seen The Matrix enough times to disbelieve everything I see and The X-Files enough to disbelieve everything I'm told, so consider me an expert.

Everyone wants to believe in a fantasy (I hate calling it that) to some degree or another—the difference is only in the degree to which one will believe, and the degree to which they mock those that take it further than they are willing to go. So is Santa Claus really Santa Claus because the Post Office delivered all those messages to him? The well-informed, self-actualized, sterile individual is constantly being pulled into this crisis of belief, demanding that they choose between what should be true and what they want to be true, and the world wants us to choose the former.

Are people just deluding themselves when they talk truthfully about what they know to be false? Are they cheap pawns to their own imaginations, running from the truth? Are they wasting their time? Or are these people enjoying their minds, and using the great gift of wonder and a wink to have amazing fun with this earth that seems to be getting older every day?

Honestly, no matter how much I hate to admit it, I don't believe the drips of water slowly slucking themselves off my fingertips in the pool are actually spores growing and disengaging from my skin. But it's so easy to dip your hand back into the water, pull it back out, and limply hang it in front of your face to watch more of the outlandish creatures grow and drop. And if, in the middle of French class, I feel a disturbance in the Force (and I swear this has actually happened), I'm going to search through tomorrow's newspaper to find out what happened at exactly 9:24 yesterday morning to set off such a sensation. "As if thousands of voices cried out and were suddenly silenced."

My Jedi abilities are so incredibly fun to use, contemplate, and talk about that I couldn't care less if they're real or not. What's the difference, anyhow?

I still haven't seen Man on the Moon, the film biography of Andy Kaufman, but from the previews I get the idea that somewhere in his life the line between acting crazy and actually being crazy got rather shady. And that, some would say, is completely problematic. How could anyone stand his loathsome company if you have to constantly question his sincerity? Humph!

I can't speak for Kaufman's situation, but I think that's a load of Krakatoa. If you don't know if someone is being serious or not, and it's bothering you enough that you're forming serious questions about this person's character, you need to either ask the person to clarify, go along with the game until you do know, or go sit somewhere else. But to imply that living life in a fantasy world is detrimental just because it hinders the boring communication that you're used to is selfish and silly. What it really comes down to (for those that just cannot, no matter how hard they try, believe in my Jedi skills), is the importance of having fun.

Obviously, having outward, rocket-fueled fun isn't always appropriate. When passing Rita on campus, I don't start twiddling my lips and making drunken Muppet noises. But when people start telling me that I can't imagine myself warbling away when I see her, that I should keep a strict, somber hold on my own mind, I am pointedly offended.

And it's just one more step to stop bothering with the key word: "imagine." I wasn't "daydreaming" about flying to class this morning — when someone asks, "I flew." I wasn't "wishing I could" throw a pencil at the blackboard in my boring math class yesterday — I was launching rockets.

So if reality really is as flubbery as we wish it could be — and it is — how can we stand to live and walk around in what someone else has created for us? How can we give in so easily and quickly as to not squint our

Do you think we are going to experience a bad hurricane season this year?

VOICE FROM THE STREET

By Chrystal George

"No, due to past occurrences, I don't think that the hurricane will hit us."

—Mayshanna Briscoe, sophomore

"No, because there is a low-pressure barrier."

—Oliver Yao, freshman

"I'm not sure because I'm from Boston."

—Kellee Lee, freshman

"I don't know. I have never experienced a hurricane while I've been here, but I would like to."

—Seyi Allu, junior

"No, because the hurricanes rarely ever come this far inland."

—Jonas Beaubrun, junior

"I have no idea since I'm from upstate New York and still looking for the snow."

A Letter from the Editor

People have approached me saying, "Elyssa, are you the editor-in-chief of The Sandspur? Do you think if I gave you an article that you could look at it and maybe submit it in the next issue?" My response to them is, "Yes, I am the editor-in-chief and yes, I can publish your article if submittable in The Sandspur!"

Remember, this is your paper too, so I welcome any stories that anyone would like to contribute about something you are doing or that you are interested in. If you don't think you are that great at writing, then let me know if you would like one of our staff members to write about what you want to get published.

If you have a special event coming up that you know of, let us have some time in advance and we can publish a story on it. Remember, as always, we are here to produce a paper that interests all of you.

While William L. Svitavsky, Assistant Professor and Reference Librarian, concentrates on 18th-century English literature, satire, science fiction, and library technology.

Dear Alley Kat

Dear Alley Kat,
I broke up with my boyfriend before I came to college because I wanted to explore my options and I didn't want to have a long distance relationship with him. Now though, I realize that there aren't any guys here that I am interested in. I want my boyfriend back. Should I even attempt to get back with him?

Do you feel it in your heart? I know this may sound like a "cheesy" question, but seriously, when you think about your ex-boyfriend, are you happy? Or is it just that you don't want to be alone? Many of us mistake a feeling of comfort for a feeling of love. In the beginning of any breakup, there are always those thoughts of doubt, which stem from a feeling of discomfort and loneliness. Offset by these feelings, we quickly jump right back into the relationship, most likely setting ourselves up for failure once again. Looking at the other side of it though, we may end a relationship because we doubt our partner or ourselves. In this case, our hasty decision is not a matter of what we wanted, but rather what we feared.

In your case, you ended the relationship on grounds that you wanted to explore your options, seeing how you were changing over to something new and different. Who knows what you would find, who knows what you will find? In any case, you made a decision to not have a long-distance relationship, and now you regret it. Ask yourself: why do you regret it? Because you want someone there to depend on? Or because you miss this person and need this person in your life? There is a difference that you have to decipher.

Go back to when you actually ended the relationship, and try to remember what had the most influence on your decision. You may discover something that you haven't thought of. For instance, possibly your friends and family repeatedly told you that this relationship would never last, or maybe you felt as though the "normal" thing to do would be to explore your options because you have a whole life ahead of you to be committed. Discovering the reasons that lay behind your decision will give you a better understanding of how you really feel and what you really want.

A long distance relationship, if worked on by both people, can be a great thing. Anything is possible if the right amount of effort is put into it. If you decide that this is what is in your heart and this is where all your feelings exist, then go with it. Don't be ashamed to ask for a second chance, and don't be afraid because "the one thing we regret the most in life are not the things we actually did, but the things we did not do" (empire records). If it is something that your ex-boyfriend wants also, then by all means go for it.

Most likely, your ex-boyfriend misses you, and, regarding your letter, it sounds as if he wanted to pursue a long distance relationship with you. Why wouldn't he want a call from you, a letter or even an email explaining how you feel? How could pursuing what you want do any harm? If it doesn't turn out how you want it, nothing will be different. In asking for a second chance, you aren't risking anything, only giving yourself more room to gain. If it is meant to be, than it will happen and fall into place as it should. If not though, you can at least say you tried, and that has got to count for something.

Follow what your heart is telling you and know that whatever happens, happens. There are many more fish in the sea, so if all else fails, "go fishing." Good luck and remember, "You never lose by loving, you always lose by holding back" (anonymous).

Peace and love,

Sports

Rollins Prevails In A Tough Battle Against Florida Southern

WINTER PARK, FL – The Rollins College women's soccer team (5-4, 1-0 SSC) rallied from a 2-0 deficit to defeat the Florida Southern Moccasins (2-3, 0-1 SSC) 4-3 in their first conference game of the season. Ryan Shaw scored the winning goal for the Tars, her first of the season. Graham Naylor added two goals and an assist for the Tars.

Florida Southern scored two goals late in the first half. Heather Swadling netted the game's first goal at the 33:50 mark, with an assist by Liane Muise. Unassisted, Brooke Szabo scored the second goal before Naylor assisted by Dana Wilcox, and Laura Carlin answered with a solid goal at the 41:45 mark that was out of the keepers reach.

With persistence and relentless defense the Tars gave a strong performance in the second half. Only 36 seconds into the second half Naylor netted a goal at off a ricocheted pass from Carlin, and an assist from Katie Greene to tie up the game. Florida Southern's Liane Muise scored again at the 55:15 mark, but Rollins quickly answered with a goal from Wilcox assisted by Naylor. The Tars didn't let up and went on to score the winning goal with a solid shot straight down the middle from Shaw at the 67:22 mark.

The Tars outnumbered the Moccasins in shots 21-11 while Jennifer Odebrecht recorded 3 saves. Lacy Emmerling recorded nine saves for Florida Southern.

Athlete of the Week: Men's Soccer Team

The Rollins College Men's Soccer Team earned Athlete of the Week honors as they upset Lynn University, the number four team in the nation in NCAA II, in Boca Raton, FL on Sunday. The Tars of Rollins College (2-3-1) stymied the offensive rhythm of Lynn and won the game 1-0. The game's lone goal came at the 52:22 mark, when Camacho, assisted by Sean O'Leary and Michael Edolo, tapped in a loose ball off a corner kick into the short side of the net.

Rollins Wins One for the Skipper

DAYTONA BEACH, FL – Rollins College men's soccer team, led by Martin Heckman's two goals, notches Coach Keith Buckley's 100th win as men's coach at Rollins. The Tars used swift speed to out duel the Eagles of Embry-Riddle in a physical game 4-3. The Tars are now (3-3-1) (1-0) while the Eagles fall to (2-4) (1-2).

The Tars, wasted little time opening up the scoring when Martin Heckman, assisted by Sean O'Leary and Scott Farrell, streaked towards the net on a breakaway and nailed a goal to the far side at the 1:33 mark. The Eagles, however, answered the goal at the 6:41 mark, when Manuel Cerrato netted a goal to the short side knotting the score at 1-1. The score remained tied until Daniel Schuck, unassisted, found a loose ball off a rebound and put it past the keeper Dario Gravato at the 29:38 mark, giving the Tars a lead they wouldn't relinquish.

The Tars, added to their lead at the 58:00 mark, when Brad Conklin, assisted by Michael Edolo and O'Leary, scored his first goal of the season, making the score 3-1. With time dwindling down, the Eagles gave one more push and made a game out of it. At the 83:17 mark, Paul Buckley, assisted by Matthias Mueller and Connelly Edozien, netted his first goal, inching the Eagles back into the game at 3-2. Heckman then broke away from the defense for his second goal, assisted by Daniel Schuck, at the 86:31 mark increasing their lead to 4-2.

Hekman's second goal ended up being the game winner as the Eagles struck one more time. At the 88:34 mark, Buckley scored his second goal off a rebound, making the score 4-3 with a minute left to play. The Eagles last push would fall short though, as they seemed to have run on empty after putting up a valiant fight.

The Tars, despite the final score dominated on the offensive side. The final shot margin was 24 to 10 in favor of the Tars, two of those smacked off the post, just missing an opportunity to blow the Eagles out at home. Timo Nenonen of the Tars recorded three saves while the Eagle's keeper Gravato made 11 saves.
